Absolute form In a simple sentence structure, absolute is synonymous with universal. An example of an absolute sentence is â€œAll English is a relative languageâ€ť. (The usual term used for such sentences is "unrestricted" or "absolute.") In a compound sentence, however, absolute and universal have slightly different meanings. The former denotes an absolute limit, whereas the latter denotes an unrestricted magnitude, that is, one that can be stretched to infinity or multiplied by the same factor indefinitely. In this case, the term absolute refers to the scale on which the size (magnitude) of a certain quantity is measured.
