The title song was the one that catapulted them into the limelight. With the birth of Hip-Hop in Japan in the 80s, some of the early members of YOSHI TOKYO, like Katsuragi Hirohisa, Miyamoto Naohiro, Miyazaki Masahiko, etc. were involved. "SOLITAIRE" was released in 1989 and featured the lyrics of a young rapper named Okamoto Shugo, who was also a member of the group. YOSHI TOKYO members like Sato Iya, Yamamoto Shigeru and Higashiyama Mitsuru all had their first songs released at this time. After performing in many clubs and concerts, YOSHI TOKYO were finally signed to a record company and released "ZERO" in 1991. They were then drafted into the popular television variety show "UCC". In 1992, YOSHI TOKYO released their first full-length album "BEST OF YOSHI TOKYO". The members of the group were determined to perform a cover song of "Dive In" by Keith And The Vibrators, but couldn't find a suitable one. Instead, they decided to create their own, which had a rock sound and was called "ALIVE". In 1995, YOSHI TOKYO released their second album "STADIUM". The first single, "Freeze" was in part a parody of "Freeze" by Tone of Ben. When the song was re-released in 1996, it became an instant hit, and was the group's first and only number one hit. From this point, YOSHI TOKYO became known as one of the top Japanese hip-hop groups. During the "ZERO" and "STADIUM" era, YOSHI TOKYO released many singles, but were never able to top the success of their first hit. The album "ALIVE" was released in 1997, but was not a success at all. In 1998, YOSHI TOKYO released a single named "PANTS", the lyrics of which were written by Sato Iya. YOSHI TOKYO went on hiatus for
