In the past, it has been a software division of the Textron subsidiary, Textron Systems. They began as a manufacturer of propeller blades. The first company to use the name Autodesk was named after the Greek Titan of the same name. When asked what he wanted to be remembered for, Scott McNealy, the first CEO of Autodesk, stated that he wanted to be remembered for building, not the company's first desk. Autodesk began as a division of the engineering firm of the same name that was founded in 1939. From there, in 1964, the firm purchased the consulting firm of Homolka and Hingley, named for founders Hildebrand Homolka and Lewis Hingley. The company name Autodesk was coined in January of 1992 when the three founders Scott McNealy, Jim Rothenberg, and Tom Cade met for the first time. The three discussed how they had been approached by their respective managers with the proposal of joining Autodesk. They had all been offered the same terms to join the company; $1,000 for the first 3 months, $2,000 for the second 3 months, and then $4,000 for the final 3 months. All three took the job at the $3,000 per month salary, and promised to carry on the tradition of "building the desk", which they had learned from their fathers. The company was originally named Autodesk, which is the abbreviation for autogenous design and engineering systems. The new company was renamed in 1994 to Autodesk Inc. after it completed their first software product, AutoCAD. The company was once again renamed in 2009 to Autodesk Holdings, Inc. and in 2012 to Autodesk Inc. The old branding of Autodesk Systems was reintroduced in March, 2013, as a sub-brand of Autodesk Inc. As of 2017, Autodesk consists of more than 16,000 employees in more than 27 locations, making it the largest North American design
