The effect of permissive hypercapnia on carbon monoxide metabolism in patients with tricuspid regurgitation and pulmonary hypertension. Permissive hypercapnia (PHC) reduces pulmonary arterial pressure in patients with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease. The present study evaluated the effect of PHC on carbon monoxide (CO) elimination in patients with tricuspid regurgitation and pulmonary hypertension. We studied nine patients with tricuspid regurgitation (mean age, 58.7 +/- 3.2 years) before and after (at 1-hour intervals) the administration of a 12% CO/air mixture in air. We also measured hemodynamic and gas variables. CO disappearance rate (CO-DR) was significantly lower when compared to before PHC (0.8 +/- 0.3 vs 1.3 +/- 0.5 liter.min-1; P
