Get ready to play a brand new game that reveals the history of the original Double Switch starring Lindsay Lohan! The newest edition of the popular Double Switch franchise stars teen heartthrob Corey Haim (The Fonogram, SLC Punk!) and former teen heartthrob Debbie Harry (National Lampoon's Christmas Vacation), has been reformed and is the lead protagonist in this all-new Double Switch game! The game features a full-length scripted storyline and will take players through seven different locations such as the arctic, a palace, a ship's deck, a mansion, a recording studio, a military prison and more.

Reviews Game Information: Double Switch - 25th Anniversary David Craddock from website IGN said it was a "good throwback to old video game days. I didn't even know this game had been released for the Genesis, but the game plays very much like a home based system. There's a lot of jumping around and looking down and if you're really bad you can even pounce on enemies. The graphics aren't as realistic as you would expect from a 16-bit game, but it's a solid game. " David Craddock from www.screensolvers.com.au said " I was a big fan of the Double Switch game for the Sega Genesis and this game was a breath of fresh air. It's an arcade game full of secrets and double switches with lots of locations to try and crack, all delivered with excellent production values, not to mention some of the most accurate 16-bit graphics ever seen. Q: Is there an easy way to automagically set up the IP address I'm connected from? I've got a router that my ISP gives me. The router is automatically assigned an address. When I access the internet, that's the address of my router. However, if I VPN into my router, I can see that I'm not at my router's address. My ISP's router would still be the device I'd be connected from, but the ISP's IP address would be whatever IP address was assigned to my external IP
