the Rails I love going out on bike rides along the trains. This past winter I rode the L in NYC, this summer I rode along the old IRT subway. Some folks also like to ride along the Hudson River on the West Side bike path. Whatever your preference, there's plenty to keep you busy! Just be sure to watch out for obstacles. Carmen's "La Traviata" @ 42nd St. and Seventh Ave. in Manhattan 6% and 11.2%, respectively. While 16.9% of patients experienced nodules that become the dominant nodule after surgery, most (31.8%) of these cases were not clinically relevant. The majority of patients (91.5%) responded to CTAP without surgery, and the non-responder rate is comparable to previous reports.[@B3][@B4][@B5][@B6][@B7][@B8][@B9][@B10][@B11][@B12] The difference in non-responder rate may depend on each institution's approach to patient selection. However, the procedures are very simple and only require a CTAP; thus, the difference is not expected to be significant. There are various factors that may affect the non-response. The cut-off values of the radiological response to distinguish non-responder and responder are diverse, possibly due to the difference in patient background.[@B4][@B5][@B7][@B9] While an initial decline of 50% or greater is considered the cut-off value for a radiological response, the same value has not been used in all studies. According to Manno et al.,[@B11] a non-responder to CTAP could be considered when the nodule size exceeds 5 mm and the increment of the lesion size is > 25%. The response rate in our study is within the range of that reported previously. The majority (88.8%) of patients with multiple stage tumors maintained their response after surgical debulking. In contrast, there was a decrease in non-responders after CTAP in those with solitary stage tumors. The reason for this difference is unclear; however, the initial response to CTAP may be maintained after surgery. Therefore, the final response to CTAP can be predicted by using radiologically acceptable cut-off values. 5ec8ef588b
