Sleep has received much attention in the context of depressed patients since it was recognized that major depression is accompanied by nocturnal insomnia and early-morning awaking. Late-night insomnia and early-morning awakening are frequent in patients with depression. Although the concept of insomnia is not limited to depression, there is evidence that some of the treatment and psychobiological model that underlie depression are also pertinent to insomnia. On the other hand, the co-existence of depressed mood with somnolence in some patients with insomnia may have a basis in the aetiology of insomnia. The benefit of hypnotics in the treatment of depressed and non-depressed insomnia is now largely established. There is also evidence that antidepressant drugs such as imipramine and antidepressants alone are effective in the treatment of insomnia related to depression. More limited evidence regarding the role of antidepressants and nondrug psychotherapy in the treatment of insomnia is also reviewed here.Q: Unable to fire action from other servlet i am trying to fire the action from the servlet page-1 but it is getting failed. i am not able to understand where i am doing wrong. servlet-page-1 public void doGet(HttpServletRequest request, H
