 Q: Why is *this considered the first argument/object in a virtual function? I am currently learning about virtual functions and I was wondering why in the book that I am currently reading it is stated that we have to pass the 'first argument/object' as the this pointer...I know it is usually the last parameter but in the case of a virtual function it makes the meaning of the function obsolete, I mean the compiler should have the ability to make diterence between the two...So why would we have to pass the first argument/object as the this pointer? also: is there any reason why the specifier '(*this)' is specified as an first argument in the constructor and then in the function since it works the same way/? class A { public: virtual void function() { } }; class B: public A { public: B():A() { } }; A: The gist is that every "function", whether virtual or not, invokes "function call operator": vtable[func][] // ^ index // ^ // | // this Constructors (often encoded as constructors with no arguments) are special cases, as it allows us to avoid the (slight

Table of Contents: THIS LIST WILL SUSTAIN YOU IN YOUR TOURS IN THE DUNGEON OF DARKNESS. - [Civil War] - [The Courts] - [Conflict] - [Lord and Prince] - [The Introduction] - [Civil War] Story of the Civil War After Prince Ryon Aydan defeated the Lord Grentel, he stayed in the Town of Rorai to rule the empire. Although the truth of the civil war had already been decided, the civil war still rages on. Because of the fame and power of Prince Ryon, the legendary heroes and adventurers came to the empire and gave it a chance. The adventurers who came to the empire from the land of the Northern Lands were called the Azeno's Heroes and the adventurers who came from the land of the Southern Lands were called the Rorai's Heroes. In the civil war, the House of the Royal Archer in the land of the Southern Lands and the House of the Stygian Lords in the land of the Northern Lands become the victors of the empire. As the ancestors of the House of the Royal Archer in the land of the Southern Lands, the Rorai's Heroes were formed into the House of the Royal Archer. The Azeno's Heroes, who were allied with the House of the Royal Archer, were formed into the House of the Big Heart. The House of the Royal Archer and the House of the Big Heart gained the trust of the Empire's High Lord. Hire
