The ability to calculate realistic player movement and accelerations is part of Fifa 22 Product Key's Total Football gameplay, where players can make "cutbacks" or "collects" – short, precise sprints – to outsmart defenders, sending them off on the wrong foot. They can also use unbalancing tactics such as diving or out of bounds to pull away leads. "FIFA's gameplay is a unique and authentic experience that rewards players for their actions," said Jürgen Fitschen, CEO of Electronic Arts. "We've been working closely with the Global Sports Football Association on 'FIFA 22' and are excited to introduce 'HyperMotion Technology.' We've been testing this exciting new technology with our professional player base and we're confident that this technology will add a new dimension to FIFA gameplay and allow for even more player options to compete at a higher level." "Greece's Nikos Sarantakos is among those who have already tested 'HyperMotion' technology in the real world," said Pedro Pinto, Global Sports Football Association president. "We are excited to bring this to the global player base in 'FIFA 22.'"" "By using the strength of the PS4 and PlayStation VR, 'HyperMotion' will allow us to bring our 'Total Football' gameplay to life in FIFA," said Jonathan Papelbon, Senior Producer at FIFA development studio EA Canada. "We're looking forward to bringing 'Total Football' to PS4 and PS VR through both 'FIFA 22' and 'EA Sports Football'." Update: Today we got our hands on FIFA 22 and during a few minutes of gameplay, we came away impressed. FIFA 22 is a big improvement over FIFA 19 and we'll have plenty of new stuff to show you in the coming weeks. Head on past the break to see exactly how EA has improved FIFA's engine. You'll be taken through a couple of FIFA gameplay modes and while there's a few new additions, you'll first notice the "Hyper Motion" technology. It has been developed by EA Canada and uses "machine learning technology" to make AI-controlled players more human. The AI has also been improved. You'll be able to set the AI difficulty and the body
