hamster cells exposed to cyanoacrylate derivatives. Cyanoacrylate esters have been suggested as potential carcinogens or mutagens. In this study, cytotoxicity and mutagenicity of four cyanoacrylate esters were evaluated using peripheral blood erythrocytes of Chinese hamsters. The test substances used in this study were the esters, 2-cyanoacrylic acid, 2-cyanoacrylate, 3-cyanopropionic acid and 2-cyanoacrylonitrile. Cytotoxicity of test compounds was examined by a micronucleus (MN) test using peripheral blood leukocytes of Chinese hamsters. The following results were obtained: (i) 2-cyanoacrylic acid was not cytotoxic, and

(ii) the rate of MN increased in cells from animals exposed to 2-cyanoacrylate and 3-cyanopropionic acid. The simultaneous increase of MN rate for the two groups indicates that the cytotoxic action of 2-cyanoacrylate may be mediated by DNA damage
