
Microsoft Office 2018 Pro Plus V18.0.4668.1000 (x64)

if youre like me, you use a mix of microsoft software, including office, windows, and other applications. you can see a list of the office apps that are installed by opening the programs and features window (control panel > programs and features). in particular, you can see a list of the latest update for office. to get the latest version of office, click view installed updates to open the update programs window (control panel > updates and security). then choose the office updates tab, and you'll find the latest update for office. but the constant security and quality updates are only available to users of the perpetual-license versions of office, not to those who are more interested in just getting the software now and using it as-is for at least the next seven years. the free software community has forked office 2021, created the openoffice.org project, which offers a stable, reliable, mature alternative to the perpetually-updated, perpetual-license office. so if you bought office 2021 earlier this year, you're not alone in being frustrated by the constant security and quality updates. this is, admittedly, a tricky problem to solve. the good news is that microsoft has already promised to roll out more frequent updates. (those periodic service updates are one reason why we keep using office. they provide us with a way to be sure we're always running the latest and greatest versions of the suite.) the bad news is that microsoft has also promised to end its perpetual-license plan. to do all that, you have to install the office proplus (non-free) version of office, not the office home & student (free) version. this is because the office home & student version of office only includes the one year of support and updates that office 2016 provides.
