There's a generic type that is passed into a method. The method operates on a generic type with a special type constraint. The method can create a corresponding non-generic type when the generic type is null. I am trying to create an extension method for this generic type. However, the compiler complains that I can't use the generic type with "... is a type parameter". What is the correct extension method syntax here? public static class MyExtensions { public static object Make(this double @this) { double v = @this; // , which looks through a sequence of objects to find only elements that meet your type

In this post I want to talk about a topic I've been working on for a while now. So what is it exactly and why is it useful? First of all, I want to make a few things clear: Thing #1 This is a PLUGIN that is mainly written in javascript. Thing #2 This is a STORE that can be used directly from a website. And last but not least Thing #3 This plugin is a re-implementation of the easyrabbit plugin written in PHP. Here's a preview of it: In this article, I will explain how I did it. In my test setup I used two kind of sites, the first is my test site as you can see here. The second is a public site. In my test, I've tried to use html markups, CSS and possibly also React as both these have become more and more popular in the past years. To find the public demo of this plugin, just visit this site. The App When the plugin starts, it starts a socket server and a http server. The first of the two servers listens on a port while the second on a port, that isn't visible. The socket server sends regular files that can be played by the plugin, these files are basically a bunch of image files with a specific format. Firstly, I decided to use a HTML5 video element for each file. In most cases, the video element should have the attribute muted=1 added to it, in order for the player to function. This way, the plugin can do all the work on it's own without any server-side actions being necessary. In this case, the player plays the media file until it has reached the end, this way the files have a limited duration. You can of course change this by simply setting it up correctly. The system used in order to do this is simple. The 0cc13bf012
