Manual adjustment of exposure can now use a Luminance slider with Base Exposure and Saturation, rather than having them float in there with no association to exposure. Both of these adjustments correctly affect the entire image. The Luminance slider isn't as visually appealing, though, because it doesn't clearly display luminance in the image's highlights and shadows. The new Camera Calibrations module includes further refinements to lens distortion. With these, you can set up a lens distortion profile. It then creates a distortion preset based on that profile, which you can then use to distort images. It's worth noting that, when this process is complete, you will not be able to edit the distorted image directly in Camera Raw mode. You will need to use the Photographer's Tool or Camera Raw's other Layers panel editing tools to do that. Moving on, the Noise reduction function is now using an S-Curve with a default Curve Slope of 30 points per Cent (which, generally speaking, leaves more of the noise in the image and less in the shadows).
