Mogul is a beautifully simple and quick app in how it screens and edits images. This app just takes selecting the right tool and selecting the right tool options and pressing the down arrow key and by the time you are done, you are done. More advanced users, like me, might want to use alternate methods to get the same effect, but for the average user, it's fantastic. Photoshop also has the ability to create HTML e-cards, which–for now–employers only. However, you can also create a Word doc (which you can also send via e-mail), or a PDF, or a JPG, or even a video. You can also use your own graphics to create a professional-looking PDF. You can also combine modules into one, so you can add text to the top of the document, then print that to PDF, create a greeting card using the included JPG module, then make space at the bottom for text, then print that to PDF, then put the text at the top and the other text at the bottom of the PDF, print that, then save that as a JPG, and finally put the JPG on a CD. All of this is easily accomplished within the app. For example, you can add the text to the top, add the JPG to the bottom, and then export the PDF with the text at the top and the JPG at the bottom. It is possible to do this manually, but it's pretty tedious. Obviously, I have no idea how this would work in the ASP. I'm sure it's wonderfully easy, and that is important to note. While using the filter, i often found myself wanting to enter descriptions in the caption field. Unfortunately, this isn't possible to do so. While it doesn't really affect the usability in any way, it is certainly a bit of a pity and it is also something that makes the feature seem a bit limited.
