Comments commentsQ: When using templates, is there a way to get reference/usage-of-a-template to work with enums of other templated types? It is possible to resolve references to other templates where the instantiated type and/or template parameters are templated. This is the desired behavior. For example, we can have a function that is declared to take a `std::vector` that uses a templated class templated with the Enum type. The `std::vector` needs to be a vector of Enum type for the type we want to store in it. In the code below, I created an enum class called `ElePart`. Here, I wrapped a function `int` that takes a templated vector of Enum type and returns the value from that vector. In this case, the vector needs to be of size 16. The enum class cannot itself be templated. This is because it has a constructor and destructor that might need the templated instantiation for this type to operate. This works fine. I can pass in `Enum`, `Enum`, `Enum`. For the first value, I get 0. For the second value, I get 6. And for the 16, I get the value 14. The problem is that I don't know how to resolve to vector of this type so that I can use the value stored in the vector. The only way I can get it to work is by using another enum class called `EltPart`, which is templated. So the template parameter
