My main focus is on questions. Sometimes I will answer questions, but I am not out of the house to do any of the "hard work". A: You could, theoretically. Reputation from questions depends on a number of factors, one of which is the number of answers you provide. If you answer many, your reputation will go up due to more than the points you earn on questions. You could theoretically do this by answering questions well and, at the same time, asking good questions. So you can earn a lot of reputation by answering questions that are highly rated, provided that those questions really are good and that your answers are on the mark.
