Long-term engraftment potential of human cord blood stem cells in the non-obese diabetic severe combined immunodeficient mouse. Mouse and human fetal neural progenitors (hNPs) and cord blood (CB) stem cells have been successfully transplanted into the damaged brain of adult mice. We have developed a new immunodeficient mouse model that has also been used for the study of human stem cell transplantation. Human CB stem cells have long-term engraftment potential into severe combined immunodeficient (SCID) mice. In these studies, two adult NOD/SCID mice were transplanted with CB CD34(+) cells in the left striatum and with hNPs in the right striatum using 6-micrometer diameter hydrogels. Human neurogenesis occurred in both sites 7 months later, as shown by the presence of beta-tubulin III(+) neurons. These studies demonstrate the potential of human hNPs and CB to be used as neurorestorative therapies in the damaged brain. We've all heard the stories: One time the 570a42141b
