In my bash script I want to start a child, then wait for child process to exit. if [[! -z $VAR_EXIT]]; then ./minimal.py exit fi sleep 3 but if run this script, a few seconds later I get the message: # $./start.sh # Start minimal.py. # min.py: can't execute child process; reap it, or use -c to force behavior I can use the -c option to kill the child. The question is: is there a way to make the child timeout itself? A: Add this to your code: if [[! -z $VAR_EXIT]]; then echo 'no idea' >&2 sleep 3 ./minimal.py fi This will allow your shell to tell you what's happening. In your case, it'll tell you that the child exited before you could reap it. You can also use kill with -9, but you need to change your script to expect a -9 so that there is a SIGKILL. This will let you know that your kill command was successful. If you don't want to know that, or care about the child failing, you can use something else like the -STOP option to wait() or sleep(3) like this: if [[! -z $VAR_EXIT]]; then sleep 3 ./minimal.py exit fi while sleep 3 & do read -r
