â€”.5.dAiT>You ride the bus when you can..you get a lift if you need it. There are a lot of backroads to keep you in the country. And once you get past the interstate,the roads get prettier and the atmosphere gets quieter. You don't hear a lot of the noisier vehicles like trucks that use the highways. Don't think I'm "nailed in" too tight. I'm used to the city, but one of my friends grew up in the country and she says that the only reason she likes big cities so much is that there are so many things to do if you travel for an hour or two. If you go too far for that, just ride. Don't worry about the grocery shopping, like Omart said. Small towns have only one grocery store. I know that my mom and sister did their grocery shopping (i.e. enough groceries to last the week) on the way back home after work and then would exchange with my dad. Every town has the same gas station, so you can go there, fill up, do your shopping, go to the post office, etc. You might
