The Pen tool is a sophisticated, digital version of a pencil. It has several subtools for creating precise shapes or text boxes, and features such as line smoothing and gradients. Using a brush, you can create almost any kind of stroke — from blurry lines to precise, tattered watercolors. Selective Color is a great way to adjust the overall tone or color of an image. Filters can either change the look of your picture or blur your image to give it a soft look. If you have an image in front of a green background, for example, you can use a Smooth filter to make the background look like water. The Liquify filter can stretch, stretch, rotate, and skew your image — a handy tool for adding artistic flair to everyday shots. While most filters are opaque, the Dodge and Burn filters can make your picture brighter, or even give it a three-dimensional, painted look. The Clone Stamp tool is used to edit and repair photographs. You can clone out or add pixels to another part of an image. You can use the Clone Stamp to remove dust or scratches from your photos. The Clone Stamp tool is very powerful. It can copy any area of an image to be pasted in another part of the image. If you want to remove scratches from your camera's body, for example, you can clone out the area of the photo with scratches and paste it in another area of the image. Photoshop is a wonderful piece of software, but it can be confusing at times. This article will show you the basics of working with the tool. The present invention relates to a process for preparing powdery polymer compositions that contain a natural polymer and at least one different type of polymer. Powdery polymer compositions are a preparation which, as a rule, are prepared starting from spherical or elongated granules. The frequently used different types of polymer are, in particular, polyethylene, polypropylene, a mixture of polyethylene and polypropylene, styrene, and graft polymers of styrene and acrylonitrile. There are processes in which dry powdered polymers are first granulated and in which the granules that have been obtained are then blended with natural polymers. However, the known processes have the disadvantage that a relatively high proportion of polymers are needed to obtain a uniform product. Attempts have therefore been made to introduce the polymer in the granules in the form of polymer solutions or polymer dispersions. European application 0-1318 579 discloses polymer compositions consisting of a granulate with an inert core which is composed of polyethylene and to which a polymer dispersed in vinyl butyl chloride is fixed. In the process, the granulate is mixed in an extruder with vinyl acetate and the polymer dispersed in vinyl butyl chloride is introduced in the extruder and additionally extruded at a temperature between 60.degree. and 120.degree. C. with the aid of a kneading blade. European application 0-292 262 discloses polymer compositions consisting of granulates which are composed of an inert core to which a polymer dispersed in vinyl butyl chloride is fixed. This process involves a granulate containing inert pieces on whose surface is a polymer dispersed in vinyl butyl chloride. The granulate is mixed with vinyl acetate in a twin-screw extruder and the polymer dispersed in vinyl butyl chloride is introduced with the aid of a kneading blade. European application 0-133 463 describes a process for the production of polymer compositions in which polymer granules are wetted with a solution of a monomer to which the polymer is soluble at temperatures below 60.degree. C. and are then mixed with a binder which is also dissolved in the monomer. In the case of the known processes, polymer granules are converted into the polymer in the preparation of the polymer composition. Generally, the polymer is present in an amount of at least 20% by weight. This is very high; for the polymer, the proportion of polymer granules is of importance.

Only the polymer, which is
