I'm trying to figure out how to generate a keygen for my Autocad for a friend and I do not have the serial number for his product. The serial number is 0000-00-000-0000 but I only need part of the string. The part I need is "0000-00-000-0000". I don't know what to look for to find the part in the string where the space is. The string is too long for me to search the string for the word "nooze" and the part I'm looking for. Thanks for your help. A: The following command will print a modified version of the string with the "0000-00-000-0000" removed: `grep -oP "^0000-00-000-(.)-0000$" input_file` To ensure that it only ever prints the one line, wrap the above command in a while `IFS= read -r line; do ... do your stuff... done` Even though we are simply printing out the modified string, we have also saved the original string. This could have been useful in the future when we want to write an editor. Q: Why does the `image.src="next_image.jpg"` not respond to onclick? HTML: `JavaScript: function changePic(next_pic) { document.getElementById('pic1').src = next_pic; }` Also, this doesn't work either: `function changePic(next_pic) { document.getElementById('pic1').src = next_pic; }` A: That's because you're setting the `src` attribute to change (which doesn't make sense), and then trying to access the element using its ID (which is the ID you defined in your HTML). Try setting the element itself. `var element = document.getElementById('pic1'); element.src = next_pic;` The present invention is directed to an improved method of forming hollow arrow shafts. More specifically, the present invention is directed to a method 0cc13bf012
