Males only. Reproduction is based on bait or hovering. All Day Bait-Mating Boobs: Using this pattern, males visit a female and clasp her, the male reciprocates as much as he can until the female moves and releases her, regains her feet, pushes him away or cowers from him. A bit of both can occur in a session. If both parties stay still they can continue this pattern, but the third time it will be for sex. Bait-Hovering: This is a pattern where the male and female hover around each other in a 2nd plane, like a sandwich. This occurs frequently in the mating season and is one of the most problematic mating patterns. One Party Attempts to mate while the other hovers around. The Male attempts to copulate with the female, who then moves away and the female who he was unable to access, he then hovers around her and her partner. A form of "sandwich mating" in which the male alternates between two females, staying as close as possible to both of them while mating with them. Bait-Petting: This occurs when a male hovers around a female without attempting to mate. Usually this is done by a male that has no interest in mating with that female, either due to earlier interactions with that female or because the male wishes to avoid conflict. This pattern is usually accompanied by the female giving the male her ovipositor. Usually males are not actively vying for the best female and instead stand by to see if they are approached. They then take up a position close to the female he can interact with and wait for interaction with the female. The most active hours are after sunset and before sunrise, males tend to leave when the day starts or when the sun is high in the sky, but not at night. Males hover and position themselves for the best view of females and their choice of a mate. Females also hover to the best view and a male positioned correctly will mate with a female. Good times for observing this mating pattern are when there is a large amount of food available, when nocturnal fauna is starting to leave the area, or when it is dark. Bait-Copulation: Most males that have visited a female will attempt to copulate with her once. If the female is receptive to him, he will perform a full mount and copulation, if she is not receptive,
