We've worked hard to make the workflow as consistent and predictable as possible, and expect this will be a case for most users. In order to do this, we're developing a new image management system called Image Automation that will unify the workflow for the entire Adobe suite. While this is still in development, it's going to be a rich, new image management system that's not limited to the linear workflow of Photoshop. While we're developing Image Automation, we're also looking to modernize your experience with existing workflow controls like layers and plugins. In the process, we're also going to continue to develop the next version of Photoshop. It will include incredible new features, including a set of new tools that will appeal to both designers and artists. This effort will also continue to bridge the gap between the creative and design worlds. In the end, this will help usher in a new set of workflow tools and system that will allow you to take your projects to new heights. The Adobe Design Team is already working on this next version of Photoshop, and you can see the new tools as we showcase them. We feel this will be a true new and improved Photoshop for all our users. But what about you, the reader? What are you most looking forward to? Which workflow controls and features would you want to see? Share your thoughts and ideas with us in the
