Autocad Xforce keygen character generator Â. MAKING THE BUS: Is 'prepping' for a pandemic a privilege, or a right? Note: This story was originally published on March 18, 2009. It has been updated and republished with permission on April 30, 2010, to reflect a recent security threat that is no longer a problem. However, it is expected to be back in its original form as the morning/afternoon rush to the beaches will begin over the weekend. So far, the United States is the only country that has had much of an outbreak of the dreaded Swine Flu. We now know that upwards of 15,000 people have been infected (and some have died). Additionally, the H1N1 strain in particular poses a problem for pregnant women and people who are immunocompromised. I cannot imagine what it would be like to be one of these people. I am definitely a prepper, but I have been blessed with what I consider to be a middle class existence. That being said, I can't help but think about what will happen if I were one of the people who was sick or suffering from the dreaded Swine Flu. In a nutshell, I would rather be sitting behind a desk at work, where my co-workers are informed of my status, than trapped on a bus as it cruises down I-10 with everybody talking about me and my status. This is my current stance on the subject of "prepping" for a pandemic. I have been doing everything I can to protect myself, my family and friends, but that means I need to practice and constantly be on the lookout for the many things I should be prepared for. It is not going to make me feel any better to know that thousands of people are stuck on a bus that is going to be taking the same route as the bus that had me and my family on it. I am certainly not going to be at home. I would rather be in the hospital. When the virus first started popping up on the news I was shocked and nervou
