Court: Police in Keller could force marijuana checkpoint without search warrants This is an archived article and the information in the article may be outdated. Please look at the time stamp on the story to see when it was last updated. Please enable Javascript to watch this video Keller police can do a roadside drug checkpoint without search warrants, a Travis County Court of Appeals ruled Monday. The ruling could help ease tension between law enforcement and people who want to have marijuana legalized. But it could also anger police, who are already growing weary of the state's politically-fraught pot debate. "To allow the checkpoint to occur is to create a deadly trap of auto vehicles forcing motorists to cross over into Mexico and back again," Ed Corn, one of the plaintiffs, said. In 2010, some of Corn's friends pulled over for a routine traffic stop. One of them was carrying a small amount of marijuana, or about two joints. "This is not a situation where we had a car that was going 100 mph," Corn said. But the police ordered them all out of their cars

Thyroid papillary and follicular carcinomas: a clinicopathologic study of 18 cases with comparison to malignant fibrous histiocytoma. Thyroid papillary and follicular carcinomas (TPCs) are uncommon tumors. Some factors that have been previously identified in favor of a favorable prognosis include: male gender, cytology and a benign or low grade appearance. A review of 18 cases of TPCs was performed. All patients presented with a solitary mass. Mean follow up was 7.9 years (range 1.4-27). Grossly, the tumors ranged from 2 to 10 cm with a mean of 4.4 cm. Most were small nodular lesions confined within the thyroid gland. The lesions demonstrated a peritumoral capsule in 14 cases. Incomplete capsule invasion was identified in only 3 cases. All tumors were histologically examined and compared with a contemporary group of malignant fibrous histiocytomas (MFHs). As seen in our series, MFHs

The K2 mission A red dwarf star with a long-lived companion could help explain why the planet-hunting Kepler mission has been so successful in finding exoplanets, scientists say. The rare star, named EPIC 249986658, has a long-lived companion -- a brown dwarf -- that it shares its orbit with. Astronomers from NASA's Ames Research Center are using the Kepler spacecraft, launched in 2009, to study EPIC 249986658's extreme activity. The Kepler mission, now entering its seventh year, has discovered more than 2,300 exoplanets, many of which are super-Earth-sized planets with at least one year of life. A single planet like Earth, orbiting a star like our sun in a stable orbit, is considered habitable -- but to find an Earth-like planet around an ordinary star, scientists say, is a true test of a planet's worth. Scientists who study exoplanets have found that all the stars in the Milky Way galaxy are born with one planet, but then they start to play a game of "Jenga." Much like Jenga, they build planets out of rock and gas, and then tinker with them. Some form a stable orbit around the star, but many planets end up on unstable orbits, crashing into one another or into the star. Now, the scientists
