generally, international organisations do not operate in a vacuum and therefore, they come into contact with other actors. archer ( 2007 :37) found that international organisations do not operate in a vacuum, but operate in a broader context, which is the international community. archer ( 2007 :37) further submits that the international community has important implications for the effectiveness of the un and its agencies. archer ( 2007 :37) notes that the international community is an important context in which the un and its agencies operate, and this creates a challenge for their effectiveness. the literature on international organisations is replete with various conceptualisations of international organisations. the following literature reviews on this subject are therefore included to ascertain their claims. the legitimacy of international organisations and their decisions or actions is closely linked to and can stem from accountability and transparency. these are the fundamental principles of good governance and its application is not limited to international organisations (shai 2016b ). karns, mingst and stiles ( 2015 :39) state that the unsc, world bank, wto, and imf have been accused of operating in secrecy. additionally, sato ( 2009 :21) posits that the wtos predecessor, the general agreement on tariffs and trade (gatt) was criticised for being opaque as there was a perception that you have to go to the gatt in order to get any information on the gatt. karns et al. ( 2015 :39) point out that some organisations have established measures to ensure accountability, and one example is the world banks inspection panel. however, they also submit that many igos suffer from what schillemans and bovens ( 2011 ) termed the multiple accountabilities disorder due to having multiple tasks and constituencies. the multi accountabilities disorder in the international system can also be attributed to an overlap in the membership of certain international organisations. the case in point is the southern african development community (sadc) and common market for eastern and southern africa (comesa) (ndaguba, nzewi & shai 2018 ; united nations economic commission for africa 2018 ).

the article concludes that the oas and the eu are not the only international organisations that have developed nsas, but their roles are more far-reaching. nsas are active in the decision-making processes of other international organisations. they also play a role in resolving conflicts within international organisations. the advent of the international union of students (ius) signalled the emergence of student organisations within the international arena. this is more evident in the modern era when student organisations have been active within the united nations and other supra-national organisations. student organisations were formed in 1948 and have continued to exist to date. historically, ius has been a major catalyst for the promotion of student participation in international affairs. through it, student organisations were able to connect with un members and gain access to policy-making forums (hewitt & lawson 2002). at the time of this article, ius has one of the largest populations of student members of any international organisation, which represents an estimated 170 million students worldwide. the emergence of ingos has been an important component of the development of international organisations. the first ingo was formed in 1909. this was the international labour organisation (ilo). the ilo is arguably the forerunner of the modern day ingo. it is an integral part of the international bill of rights (ilbor). indeed, the ilo was the organisation that became a major proponent of human rights. the ilo was created in 1919 and became a part of the league of nations. the ilo seeks to develop workers rights and alleviate poverty, particularly in developing countries. the ilo is currently the largest of the ingos. it was founded in 1919 and currently has 190 member states. 5ec8ef588b
