[Learning needs and learning activities in family medicine. The student's point of view]. To know if family medicine students, having contact with real patients and medical care in their schools' practices, have different learning needs and learning activities in comparison to students who attend "environmental" classes, and how the context of the School of Health Sciences, Hospital de Clinicas de Porto Alegre, influences the selection of these activities. In this study, we used a questionnaire to interview the family medicine students concerning their priorities, the type of learning needed and the activities performed during the first year of medical school, in comparison to the group from "environmental" study. We considered students' opinion as their main source of information. We asked the 82 students to analyze the questions while seeing themselves as a family physician. According to the students of the School of Health Sciences, there are some differences in the learning needs and activities between the groups, which may generate different learning paths in the future.Q: How do I prevent octave from using __builtin_ia32_incps/incps or __builtin_ia32_incpd/incpd instructions when working on the 64-bit x86 architecture? How do I prevent octave from using __builtin_ia32_incps/incps or __builtin_ia32_incpd/incpd when executing code and instead use a more optimized version? I need this for performance reasons. I'm currently using a 32-bit version of octave, and getting ~300x performance improvement using in-place instructions (__builtin_ia32_movups/movups for example). A: The __builtin_ia32_ macros are used to generate compiled code for "built-ins", ie macros and built-in functions, i.e. macros that exist on every machine or architecture. If you are compiling code to a specific architecture on a specific machine then you should never use these built-ins; you can use normal inline assembly instead. Q: PHP - Get the file extension from a specific filename So in my project I use the following to generate thumbnails based on a specific file: $path="uploads/main" if (file_exists($path. $file)) { $name = $file;
