Need support?The present invention relates generally to a method of detecting and measuring blood loss in patients and, more particularly, to a method of detecting and measuring blood loss after cardiac or abdominal surgery in which a separable portion of the patient's blood supply is artificially blocked and circulating blood is returned to the patient's blood supply. A wide variety of procedures have been developed for artificially blocking off a portion of the blood supply in patients to eliminate blood loss. For example, after a patient suffers a heart attack, it is often necessary to block off a blood supply to a heart in the patient's chest to allow the heart to rest. It is also known to block off the blood supply to an arm of a patient to allow the patient to receive a blood transfusion. It is also known to block off the blood supply to both legs of a patient to allow the patient to receive a blood transfusion. Typically, the procedures for blocking off the blood supply in a patient's chest include withdrawing a blood supply from the patient, inserting a cannula into a vein in the patient's body, and withdrawing blood from the patient's chest into the cannula through the vein in the patient's body. In withdrawing the blood supply, a male cannula is placed within a female cannula to allow blood to flow from the female cannula to the male cannula. The procedure for blocking off the blood supply in the arms of a patient also includes withdrawing a blood supply from the patient, inserting a separable portion of the cannula into a vein in the patient's body, and withdrawing blood from the patient's arms into the separable portion of the cannula. The separation of the male and female cannulas may be accomplished by surgically separating the second and third portions of the arterial wall at the end of the radial and ulnar arteries in the hand technology effective if applied to a semiconductor device having an SOI (Silicon on Insulator) structure. Patent Document 1 (Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication No. Hei 10 (1998)-242169) has proposed a technique for an SOI structure in which an electronic circuit is integrated on an SOI layer formed on an insulator substrate. In Patent Document 1, an SOI layer is formed on an insulator substrate. A MOSFET is formed on the SOI layer. After that, a hydrogen ion implantation process is performed in an active region of the MOSFET by using resist masks. An implantation region where implant ions are implanted and a channel region are separated by the resist masks. After that, annealing is performed to diffuse the implant ions. In this way, a MOSFET having a charge-trapping film in a channel and capable of storing a channel potential (channel potential storing MOSFET) is fabricated. Gene therapy via a herpes simplex virus-derived vector complexed with gold nanostars for chemo-photothermal therapy of human hepatoma cells. Hepatocellular carcinoma (HCC) is the second most common cause of cancer-related death worldwide. It is not often diagnosed until the disease has reached an advanced state, when it is often found to be beyond surgical cure. Gene therapy via a Herpes Simplex Virus (HSV)-based vector is potentially an effective approach for treatment of HCC. Several HSV-derived vectors have been engineered for gene therapy of HCC. The present study aimed to construct an HSV-based vector expressing BCL2 (BCL2 encoding gene) to promote apoptosis, and a cytosine deaminase/5-fluorocytosine (CD/5FC) enzyme cascade system for apoptosis-mediated drug-triggered release of fluorouracil (5FC) for chemo-photothermal therapy of HCC. Gold nanostars (AuNSs) were covalently conjugated to the surface of the silica-coated
