Say, I want to create a function called myFunc that accepts two parameters. def myFunc(arg1, arg2): # code here I want to be able to call myFunc, pass any number of values to arg1 and arg2, and have it run it as if it was typed: myFunc(1, 2) I've seen a lot of posts here and elsewhere about creating default arguments, but I don't want to be able to pass certain arguments because I don't care about them. I want to be able to pass any number of arguments just like they were typed. Is this possible? A: You can use the built-in functools.partial and create as many arguments as you want: >>> from functools import partial >>> def myFunc(x,
