Q: What does "overlapping resolution" mean? I'm a bit confused about the following statement: A: Yes, the money will come from Lucas County. B: I'm counting on you, Councillor Mayer. A: We've been working on this for two years. [...] We don't have enough overlapping resolution. What does "overlapping resolution" mean? Is it any calculation based on time scale? A: The "resolution" in overlapping resolution means that they are on the same level. If they are on different time-frames, it means that one level is doing the work on a longer time frame than the other level. Example: Both levels are used to select same counties, but level A has more detailed selection list and is able to select more in one time-frame (one year) than level B. A: Overlapping resolution may imply that one or more of the constituents (counties) have two or more independent overlapping resolutions in place on the same time-frame (e.g. one selects counties, another selects counties and specific cities within those counties, a third selects only cities but with a slightly different set of overlapping counties), as opposed to multiple resolutions in parallel but on different timeframes. A: The way I understand overlapping resolution is that A. has a more detailed set of criteria than B. Consequently, A. is more likely to select more items than B. I have no idea why A. doesn't have "enough overlapping resolution". The context was in a web development forum where the question was A. > I've been trying to get overlapping resolution with @B for days now. He's just won't budge. B. > What does that mean????? Q: Why does using nested inductors lower resonant frequency? I was wondering why using a closed loop of L1, C1 and R1 lowered the resonant frequency of a parallel resonant circuit containing L2, C2 and R2. Would appreciate any clarifications. A: All you are doing is using a closed loop to minimize the voltage drop in L1. A typical parallel resonant circuit will have the equivalent circuit as: simulate this circuit – Schematic created using CircuitLab If

This article is more than 1 year old This article is more than 1 year old Boris Johnson has accused Jeremy Corbyn of a "betrayal" of Labour voters as he opened his attack on the opposition leader ahead of the election. The Conservative prime minister spoke in an interview with the Observer in which he claimed the election would be a once-in-a-generation chance to get Brexit done and boost public spending to address public services issues. On Tuesday morning Corbyn launched a blistering attack on the Conservative election campaign, accusing the prime minister of pulling out of the hard-fought referendum and beginning an endgame to the Brexit talks in a "wholesale betrayal". Among Labour's election pledges is to write to all 20 million EU nationals living in the UK to inform them of the outcome of the EU referendum – something the government has yet to fulfil. "He's offering voters a make-or-break choice as we face the most important decision in our nation's history – leaving the EU or sticking with it," Corbyn told the Observer. "He has got it wrong. He is making a concession to leave voters who were promised a hard Brexit and who, after he broke the promise, now want him to deliver the most extreme form of it. "It is a huge betrayal and the public will see through it." Corbyn's campaign has been dogged by the challenge of how to re-engage young voters who backed leave in the referendum and who may not have voted in previous elections. A survey published on Tuesday showed the Labour leader was almost two-to-one likely to vote, but as likely to vote for the Tories as Labour on the same level. Johnson, who is campaigning to become the next Conservative prime minister, said he was working to get the "best possible Brexit deal for Britain" and wanted a "strong and stable government" in Downing Street to get on with it. "If Jeremy Corbyn is prime minister, we face being locked in a customs union that means our economy cannot take advantage of the opportunities of a good trade deal," he told the Observer. The prime minister accused Corbyn of "unacceptable anti-Semitism" and "exploiting people's divisions". He added: "Labour has a long way to go
