Adobe Photoshop is an amazing piece of software that allows users to create and manipulate images. It is often used for creating brochures, flyers, and logos. You can even use it to create professional-looking websites, illustrations, and graphics. Fortunately, there are a few different options to choose from when it comes to buying an Adobe Photoshop subscription. Most of the time, Adobe Photoshop is only available as a subscription, however, you can also purchase a set number of licenses for a one-time fee. In this case, your purchase will only contain the software and not the right to use it indefinitely.

Hello Chris,
I am having some performance issues while editing my DNG NEFs. (DNGs - NEFs with Markerless) I tried to resolve it, but I can't find the area where improvement can be made, so I am now using your workaround: disable the smart previews. It solves my performance issue, however, I still have experience the shortcomings of the DNG preview. Every time I switch to the Edit tab and click the 'Use Preview' button, I lose the DNG's link with the original image, and all the other tags (like Keywords, Location, etc) are lost as well. If other people are working with the same image, they can't use it anymore.
Would it be possible to keep all the tags and links so we can use one image multiple times with only losing the edit mode when working on the DNG?
Many thanx.
David
I agree with you that performance on my side is reduced with a the smart preview feature.
When I'm working on portraits, I always have smart previews enabled. However, when I'm working on a landscape, or a product shot, I in some cases also open a preview to look at the image whilst holding my mouse vertically to the left or right in order to modify the on screen preview horizontally. This is the only area in which I wish I had a bit more performance to work more efficiently.
And of course there's the huge advantage of having the DNG available for reference outside of the editing process. However, no matter what I've discovered, I can't see how the DNG could be divided from the original capture, as it would need to be stringed a number of times through the individual layers - and that's not possible using the smart preview feature.
I suspect that the smart preview section of the NFR and some of the other features were designed to produce a result that could not be achieved otherwise. And some of the designers may be of the opinion that's enough and doesn't want to risk compromising speed to obtain a better result.
If you are able to feedback the performance/speed issue with you smart preview feature, I would be most grateful,
Regards
Chris

Photoshop now features a new filling fill bucket command that replaces Fill and that allows you to easily cover up areas by applying a color. Adobe has also just introduced a new Fading Shadows command that blends shadow and highlight colors naturally. Photoshop has a new feature that lets you create custom web fonts, and a new slider appears when you create a new font and you need to pick a style for your font that lets you edit the style of the foreground, background, lasso, and other options, as well as the attributes for the font to appear, such as its size. There's a new pathfinder tool that's in System Files, which makes it easier to create and edit paths with the Path Stamp tool. With the tool you can create paths the same way you would with Illustrator or you can use the brush to create shapes directly in Photoshop. Another new update is the Path Selection tool, which now has the ability to change the color with the threshold bar, and it's now colored in the same color as the paths being selected. Underneath the Editing Tools settings, you now have options for the pathfinder, and you can change the Precision Slider to give you more accuracy in drawing a line or path.
