Milk is usually taken as a drink, used to give babies, and also to make cheese and yoghurt. This drink is a source of protein and calcium. It contains vitamins D and A. Milk contains more proteins and calcium than any other liquid except human breast milk. For a given weight of milk, the protein content is equal to that of blood. It also contains vitamin D. The calcium in milk is more easily absorbed by the body than calcium found in other foods. The age of a person has no effect on the protein content. There are two subtypes of milk: regular milk and skim milk. Regular milk, which has more fat, is available in larger cans and is sold by volume.
