The signal has been sampled at 512Hz and the next step is to apply a frequency binning. There are many papers available how to define the frequency binning (for example, see In order to train for a classifier, I need to apply a frequency binning with an initial binwidth of 0.11Hz. I want to know whether I can use a step width of 5 times the binwidth or 20 times the binwidth or what size to choose. Which value will lead to the smallest training error? A: There are many ways to bin a time series. Here is a classic way, using Discrete Fourier Transform: The best way to use such a binning is to compute the true Fourier transform of each bin and then apply a bandpass filter that lets only frequencies within this bin pass. There are many ways to do that. One is a FIR or infinite impulse response (IIR) filter with the frequency response corresponding to your bins. Another is a Mel filter, which simply consists of multiplying each sampled frequency by some constant (e.g., a mel-frequency cepstral coefficient): If you want to use this, you have to resample the data to the same sampling frequency of the bins, and sample at a small fraction of the sampling rate of the original data (so you won't need to change the bins otherwise). You then need f988f36e3a
