The levels of total aflatoxins, aflatoxicol (AFB1), aflatoxic (AFG1) and natural aflatoxins were analysed in feeds and waste water from a poultry farm. Aflatoxin levels in feed samples ranged from 0.1 to 7.2 microg/kg for total aflatoxin and from 0.1 to 5.6 microg/kg for aflatoxicol. This was followed by the calculation of the dose-response ratio (DRR) of total aflatoxins which ranged between 1 and 16, a finding that can be interpreted as a high-risk situation. For aflatoxic, the DRR ranged between 0.3 and 1.4 and this indicated that the risk of aflatoxicosis in poultry was low. Aflatoxin was present in the waste-water at levels of 20-40 microg/L for total aflatoxin, though these values were approximately 10 times lower than the recommended maximum levels set by the World Health Organization (WHO) (30-40 microg/L) for drinking water. Aflatoxicol was not detected in the waste-water. This finding indicated that the poultry farm is not a source of aflatoxicosis.The Italian police said on Thursday a fugitive suspected of running a real estate empire of fronts in the Italian capital is the man behind 130 forged documents, most of which hide the identity of the ultimate owner. Police believe Mario Valenti, a former senior member of a right-wing political party, may have obtained the documents via fraud, forging their identity of the alleged real estate owners and thus hiding the identities of those who financed the purchases. Police are also looking at the possibility of obtaining other documents from the documents forgeries, including the forged ID's of fake doctors who signed papers allowing the buyers access to the properties. Police are still investigating the precise reasons
